Presence	Being attentive to what is happening right now. Not lost in thinking, emotional reactions, etc.	Unconsciously lost in the past or the future; identified with thinking and doing.	actually happening and being lost in thought.	Able to witness thoughts and feelings, and to respond rather than react; able to bring oneself back to alertness when aware of having been lost in thought.	Relaxed alertness to what is happening in each moment, with a deep sense of purpose and choice; openness to what is, with resourcefulness, interdependence, and a perspective of past and future.
Observing	Noticing (and possibly describing) our sensory and mental experiences, and distinguishing these experiences from the interpretations we ascribe to them.	Habitually confuses interpretation with observation; assumes that evaluations and interpretations are facts.	Becoming aware of interpretations as distinct from observations when reviewing past events; little skill or clarity of this distinction when interacting in real time.	Increasingly remembering and making the distinction between observation and interpretation.	Effortlessly able to distinguish observations from interpretations.
Self-acceptance	Accepting oneself with unconditional caring.	Habitual reactive patterns of self- judgment characterized by shame, self-blame, self-criticism, defensiveness, or self- aggrandizement.	Noticing self-judgment, and realizing the costs to one's own wellbeing; yearning for self-acceptance.	Increasing acceptance of, and life- enriching response to, what one feels, thinks, needs and does.	Being clear and caring with oneself.
Taking ownership of one's feelings	Living from the knowledge that I alone cause my emotions - my emotions are not caused by others.	When one's feelings arise, one credits or blames self, others, or external circumstances.	Sometimes observes oneself blaming and criticizing, and unclear how to take ownership of one's feelings.	Capable of noticing when triggered, and uses that as a signal to self-connect. Sees difference between needs and	Living from the understanding that our emotional experience emerges from the state of our needs and the quality of our thinking.
Needs consciousness	Awareness of (and the willingness to honor) needs, the essential universal elemental qualities of life (like sustenance, love and meaning).		Intellectual understanding of universal needs; confuses need with strategy, thinking one must have a particular strategy.	strategies; has a vocabulary to express feelings and needs;	Living from the awareness that everything we do is an attempt (effective or not) to survive and thrive.
Reconnecting to self and recovering from reactivity	Reactivity is internal resistance to what is. Recovery is letting go of that resistance. Re-connecting to self is being with one's own experience with presence and compassion.	Mostly unconscious of habitual reactive patterns.	Sometimes notices habitual patterns and remembers empathy and/or honesty was an option.	When triggered, generally
Request consciousness & making requests	Willingness to ask for what one wants, with openness to any response; not attached to any particular outcome.	Demands what one wants or is unwilling/unable to ask for what one wants.	making demands, and failing to ask	Generally willing and able to make specific requests, and when noticing attachment to a specific strategy, strives to move from constriction to openness and creativity.	Willingness to ask for what one wants; has presence, creativity and compassion, even when the response is "no".
Mourning	Transforming the suffering of loss; letting go of resistance to what is, and being willing to allow our experience to unfold.	Blames self, others or external circumstances for loss; resists feelings of loss; tries to be "strong" or hide feelings from others.	Becoming aware of own tendency toward resistance or blame when experiencing loss.	Noticing avoidance or blame related to loss, one lets go of believing something is wrong and allows oneself to experience one's feelings, opening to a connection to needs.	Fully engaged in the wholeness of life in the presence of loss.

Empathy	Being present with another's experience, with unconditional acceptance of the person.	Habitually responds to others with sympathy, advice, criticism, shifting the focus to oneself, etc.	Easily gets lost in the story. Sometimes able to guess observations, feelings, needs and requests (with support of feelings/needs lists). Dawning intention to give others space, presence and focus.	Capable of being with another without trying to lead them, and able to reflect another's experience without affirming or adding opinions or evaluations.	when being present with another's
Dissolving enemy images	Transcending one's perceptions that another deserves to be punished or harmed.	"Us versus them" thinking; "they" deserve to be punished or harmed.	Becoming aware of the costs of having enemy images, and the possible value of exploring alternatives to punishment.	When noticing one is holding a person or group as an enemy, one is able to reconnect to the humanness of all involved, dissolving the enemy image.	Holding everyone with compassion, with respect for the well-being of all.
Discernment	Clarity, insight, and wisdom in making life-serving distinctions and choices; recognizing one has choice.	Opinions and choices are based on judgments of right and wrong; one believes one's judgments to be facts.	Becoming aware of another way to make distinctions and choices based on serving universal needs, rather than based on judgments of good or bad, right or wrong.	Has increasing competence in making distinctions and choices with a broad perspective, understanding the deeper meaning and intentions beneath the surface.	Intuitively tunes into one's clarity, insight, and wisdom, to make lifeserving distinctions and choices.
Living interdependently	Living from the knowledge that every individual is related to every other individual - every part of a system affects every other part.	Holds perspectives of independence/dependence, either/or and domination/submission without being aware of alternatives.	desire to submit/rebel.	Generally considers the needs of others as well as one's own needs.	Consistently open to perspectives and needs of others; experiences others' needs as integrally connected to own needs.
Honest self- expression	Owning one's experience and having the willingness to express authentically without blame or criticism.	Habitually expresses with complaint, blame or criticism when upset; shares opinions and beliefs as certainties.	awareness of how some patterns of thinking and expressing tend to lead to disconnection; starting to explore alternatives.	Usually capable of expressing authentically with an intention to connect, even when stressed.	Expresses with vulnerability, holding everyone's needs as precious; has openness to outcome.
Facilitating connection	Facilitating empathy and honesty in dialogue with an intent to create connection. Remaining spaciously present when	Speaks "at" rather than "with"; debates, convinces, or doesn't speak up for own needs.	Noticing life-alienated communication patterns and attempting to have more choice about how to support connection.	Conscious intention to connect; balancing honesty with inviting the expression of others. Working to expand one's range of	Communicates with authenticity and empathy; assists people to connect. Naturally self-connects and opens
Patience	one feels stress. An ability to be with one's own reactions, without acting out of them.	Usually relates with an intention to get what one wants, and/or with submissiveness.	Impatient or distracted by own impulses; interrupts; tendency to act with reactivity.		when one experiences constriction
Responding to others' reactivity	Responding rather than reacting to others who are caught up in intense separating emotions.	Reacts habitually with defensiveness, submissiveness, or avoidance when others are triggered.	Increasingly notices one's own habitual reactions and their effect on connection.	Increasing self-connection and ability to choose empathy or honesty when in the presence of other's reactivity; opening to curiosity about others' perspectives.	centeredness; accepts other when

Openness to feedback	Receiving other's perspective about our actions with equanimity and centeredness. Acknowledging and learning from one's missed opportunity to meet needs, without guilt, shame, or self-punishment.	Feedback means something is wrong or right with self or other. Feedback is interpreted as criticism or praise. Takes responsibility for the feelings of others with guilt and/or shame, or defends oneself; apologizes to protect oneself by assuaging another's feelings.	feedback.	Understands that feedback from another is the other's perspective and connects it to the other's need; connects one's own reaction to feedback to one's own needs. Increasing ability to transform guilt into learning. Fostering willingness to seek connection with others (with empathy and honesty) when events did not work for others.
Flexibility in relating	Openness and versatility in interacting with others.	Habitually relates from a perspective of right/wrong, win/lose, "should", "have to", etc.	Increasing abilty to distinguish between life-alienated communication patterns and NVC. Reactive communication patterns continue. Formulaic, self-conscious expressions of NVC honesty and empathy; thinks NVC is OFNR.	Willing and usually able to hear observations, feelings, needs and requests, no matter how they are communicated. Has started experimenting with "street giraffe", to speak in ways that are more likely to connect.	Relates naturally with authenticity and empathy. Expressions are attuned to the needs and styles of those involved, and may not "sound like NVC language".
Transforming conflict	Using conflict with others as a means to connect and create a mutual outcome.	Afraid of or addicted to conflict; unconsciously attached to opinions and strategies; takes sides.	Becoming aware of one's own reactive patterns in response to conflict; starting to notice one's attachments (to resolution, to conflict itself, to safety, etc.)	Willing to support all parties in being resourceful and creative, and to include the needs of all concerned, even in the face of one's own habitual reactions to conflict.	Has openness, curiosity, and creativity about different perspectives as an opportunity to expand awareness and take effective action.
Gratitude	Finding the value in, appreciating, and enjoying what is.	Focuses on what is missing and complains; uses and looks for validation through praise and reward.	Noticing that the strategies of praise/rewards and external validation do not support connection; starting to notice the value in appreciating met needs.	Willing and able to connect to, savor, and express the gift(s) in what is happening.	Lives in appreciation that everything can be a stimulus for enjoyment and/or growth.
	Transforming scarcity thinking into thriving creatively; joyfully contributing and receiving. Tuning in to oneself to support balanced self-care; cultivating the energy to serve life.	Resources are hoarded and/or used to control others; fear of loss or not having enough; money and things equated with security. Unconscious habitual patterns and/or restless mental activity result in decreased energy.	Becoming aware of one's fears associated with not having enough, and the value of contributing. Becoming aware of own energy levels and what influences them.	Increasing awareness of habitual programming, such as desire to hoard or difficulty receiving, and increased joy in the flow of contributing and receiving. Connected to needs as resources; motivated to seek ways to be resourceful and to contribute.	Joy and ease in giving and receiving with creativity and resourcefulness; giving is receiving. Energized by contributing to body, mind, spirit, and community.
Sharing power	Transforming domination; valuing everyone's needs with mutuality and respect; transcending submission and rebellion. Aware that we are not the roles we play; having choice about what roles we adopt and how we respond to the roles others adopt.	and submission; fear of, lusting for, or hoarding of power.	Becoming aware of domination and submission, and possibilities of relating with mutuality. Becoming aware of the suffering that can occur when we react to roles rather than responding to needs.	Aware of one's own submission or attempts to dominate. Strives to act with mutuality and empathy for oneself and other. Able to respond with self-connection, empathy and honesty, rather than reacting based on the roles self and/or other are holding.	Acting from a valuing of everyone's needs, and honoring each person's autonomy; transcending domination, submission and rebellion. Gracefully and easily assumes, responds to, and/or refrains from roles; aware of our interdependence beyond our roles.

Awareness of response-ability	Freely choosing one's responses to what shows up in life, owning one's part in what happens. Not owning others' parts, and acknowledging that one's actions do influence others.	•	Becoming aware of victim consciousness and its costs; relief and freedom in the awareness of our power, and still finding ourselves stuck in habitual patterns of guilt and blame; diagnoses others as stuck or blaming, and attempts to educate them to protect oneself.	Able to take ownership of one's experience and choices when one becomes aware of blaming, justifying, or minimizing, without trying to take ownership of others' reactions and responses.	Consistently able to respond with equanimity. Grounded and centered in authorship of one's own life. Clear about others' authorship of their lives.
Supporting holistic systems	Consciously participating in the creation and evolution of holistic systems that foster general wellbeing.	Rebels against or submits to structures; uses organizational structures to assert one's power or feels helpless in relationship to organizational rules.	hopelessness about effecting change toward systems that value the needs of those affected.	needs; willingness to contribute to general well-being, with growing creativity.	Engaging in creating and improving systems with the intention of contributing to general well-being with openness to feedback.

The state of the s

Legal information: This work is licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 Unported License, which allows you to share, copy, distribute, publicly perform, and adapt this work - under